

Where would you sleep?

You would have to sleep on the floor (called a deck) with about eighty other people, below the main deck. There would be hardly any light and hardly any air.

There was not enough sleeping space for thirty sailors and one hundred and two passengers.

Some people slept in a small boat called a shallop. The shallop would be used for exploring trips later.

Captain Jones let about twenty important passengers sleep in his cabin. He took a smaller cabin for himself.

The sailors slept at one end of the ship. A few of the sailors may have slept in hammocks, but most of them slept on the deck.
